

Shallow Clouds in Tropical Deep Convective Regimes

*Arun Arunchandra¹, Min Deng², Jimmy Dudhia³, Zhe Feng⁴,
Matthew Janiga¹, Samson Hagos⁴, Heike Kalesse⁵,
Pavlos Kollias⁵, Chuck Long⁴, Scott Powell⁶, Romain Pilon¹,
Angela Rowe⁶, David Zermeno¹, Chidong Zhang¹*

1. University of Miami
2. University of Wyoming
3. NCAR
4. PNNL
5. McGill University
6. University of Washington

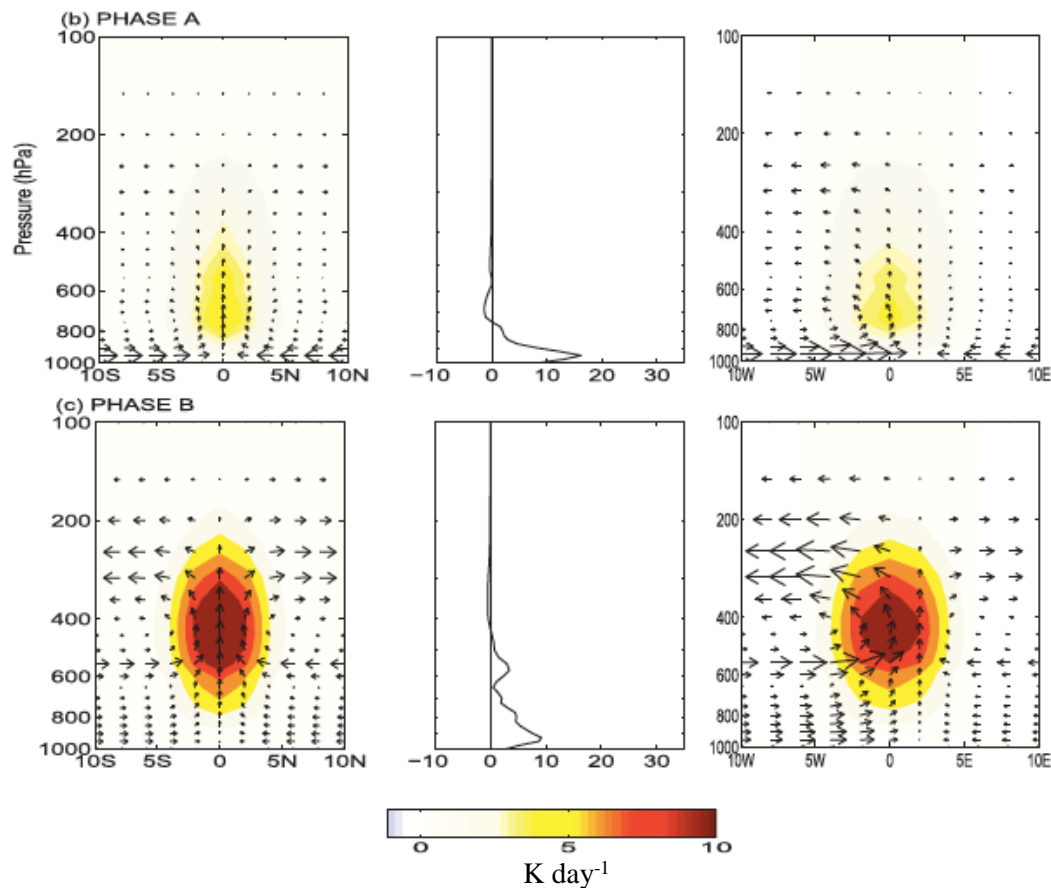

Hypothesized Importance of Shallow Convective Clouds in the Tropical Deep Convective Regimes:

1. Moistening of the lower troposphere as a pre-condition for the development of deep convection

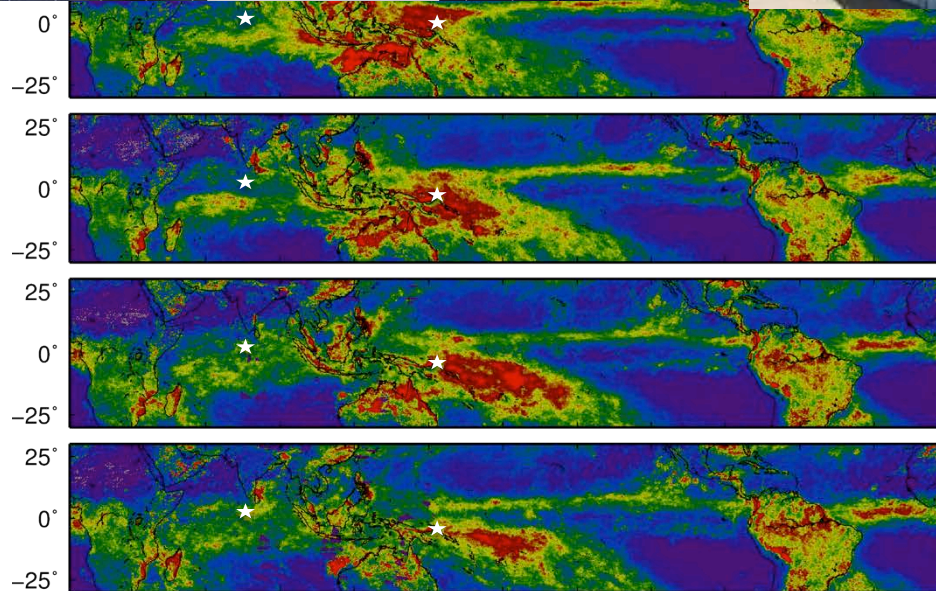

Hypothesized Importance of Shallow Convective Clouds in the Tropical Deep Convective Regimes:

1. Moistening of the lower troposphere as a pre-condition for the development of deep convection
2. Low-level heating as an effective mechanism for low-level convergence for moisture supply to deep convection

Oct 1, 2011 – Feb 8, 2012

2001 – 2014

Phase 6
225 days

Phase 7
214 days

Phase 8
167 days

AMIE/DYNAMO Shallow Cloud Research Activities:

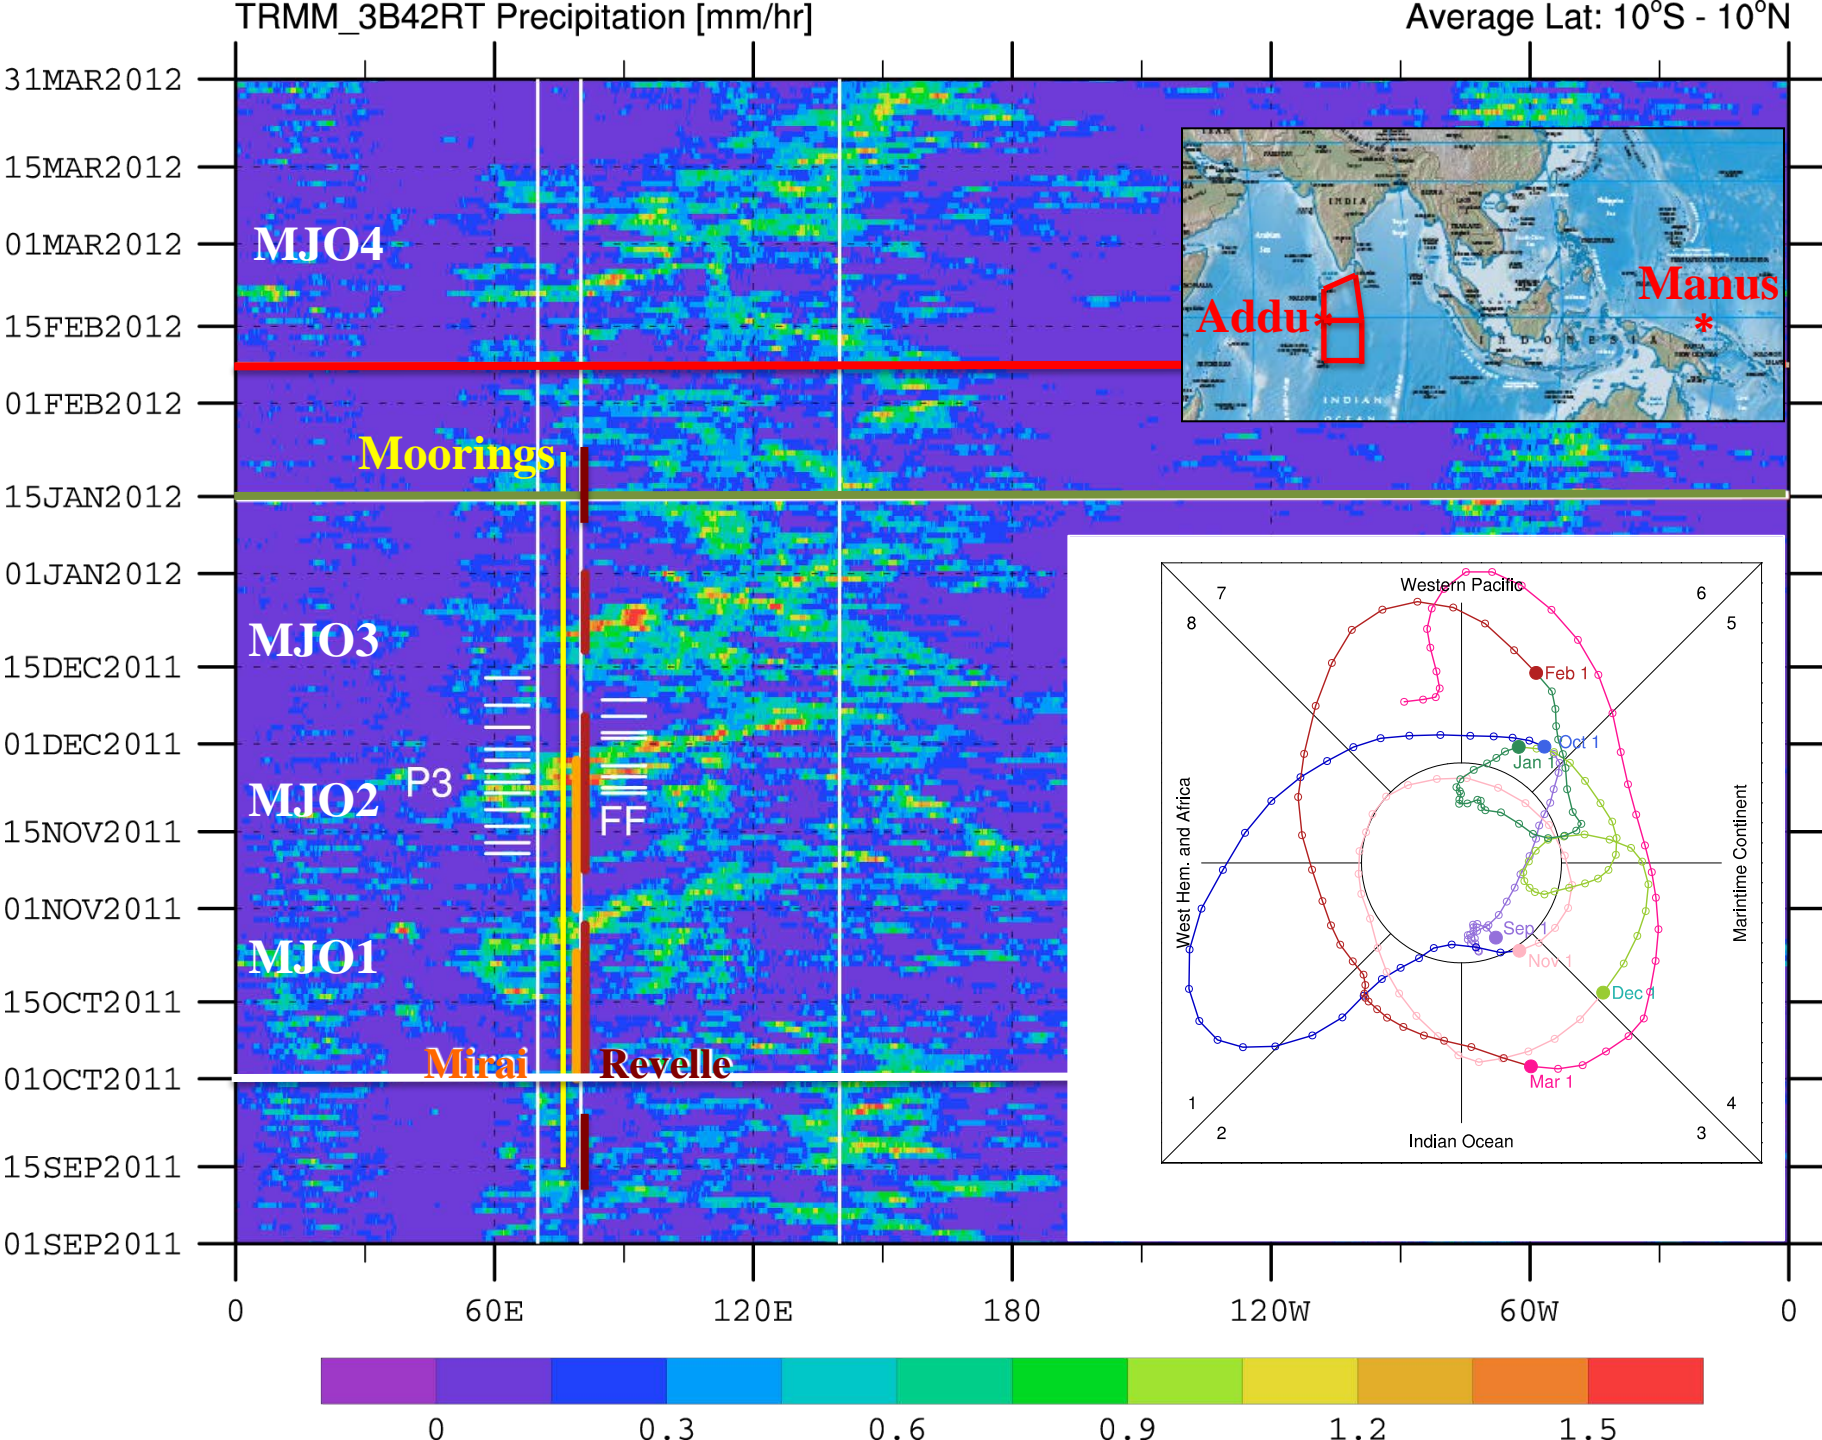

I. KAZR, S-PolKa, SMART-R comparison at Addu Atoll (October 1, 2011 – January 15 2012)

- Produce merged radar data that include non-precipitating and precipitating shallow clouds as well as deep and stratiform precipitation features;
- Calibrate Ka-band radar retrievals for (a) partition of convective-stratiform rain frequency, (b) estimate of low rain rates of shallow convection, and (c) estimate of diabatic heating profiles of shallow convection.

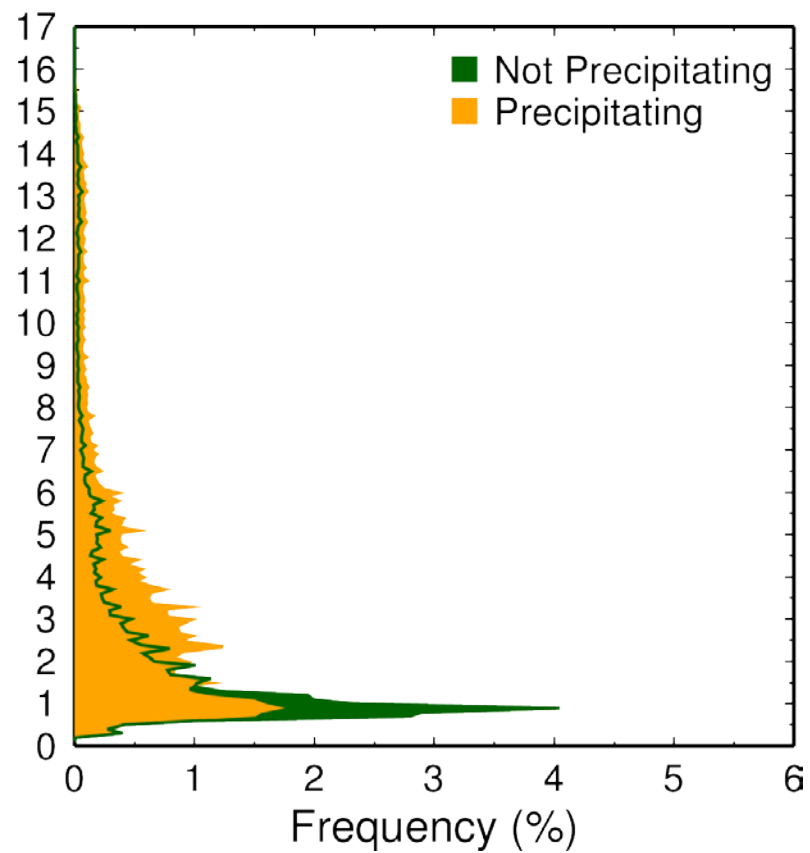

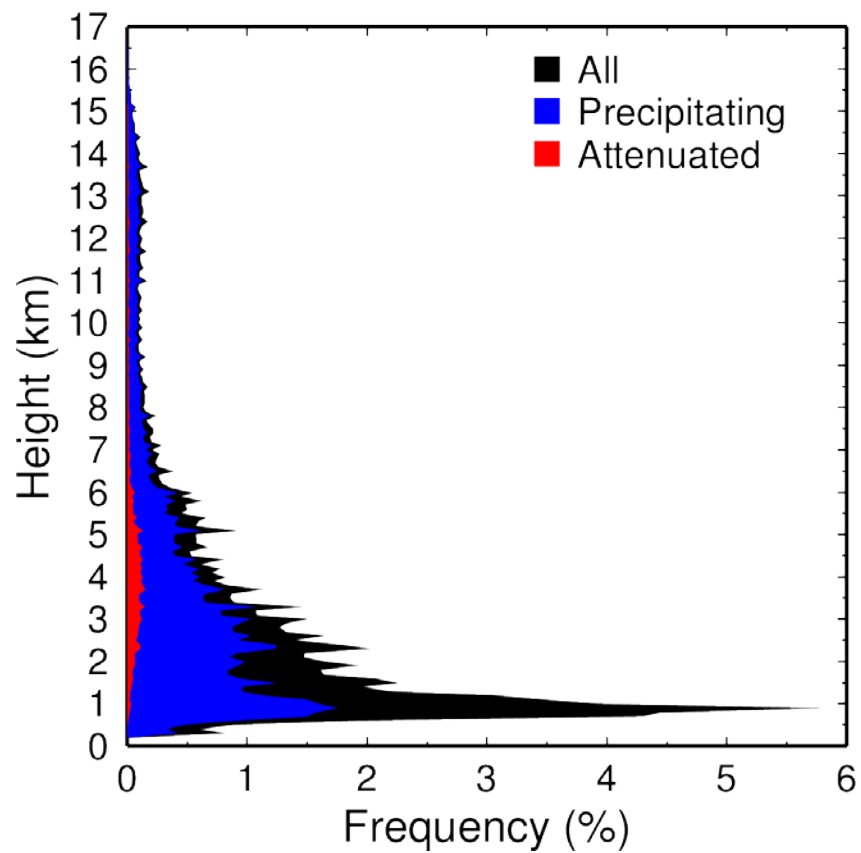

II. Detailed documentation and modeling of shallow and deep convection through the MJO events observed during the AMIE/DYNAMO field campaign.

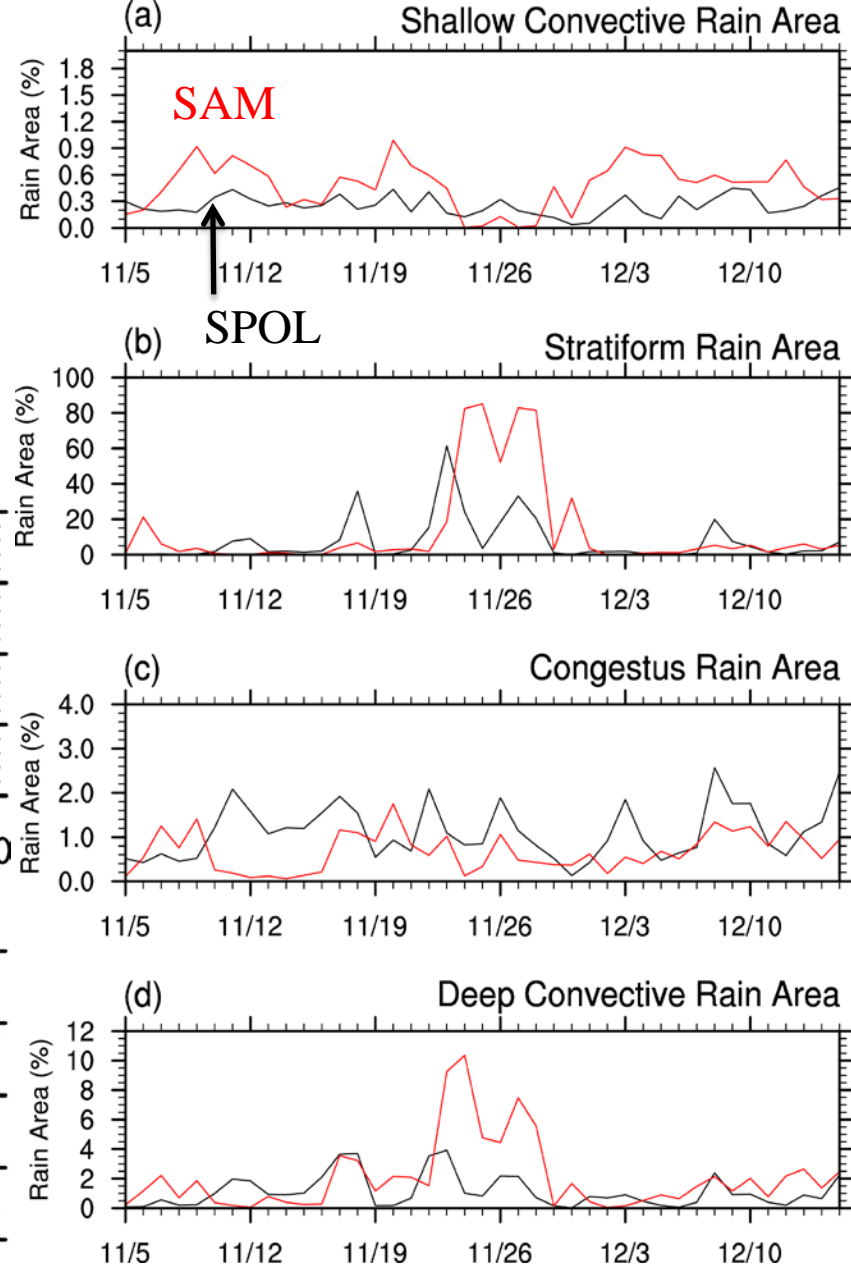

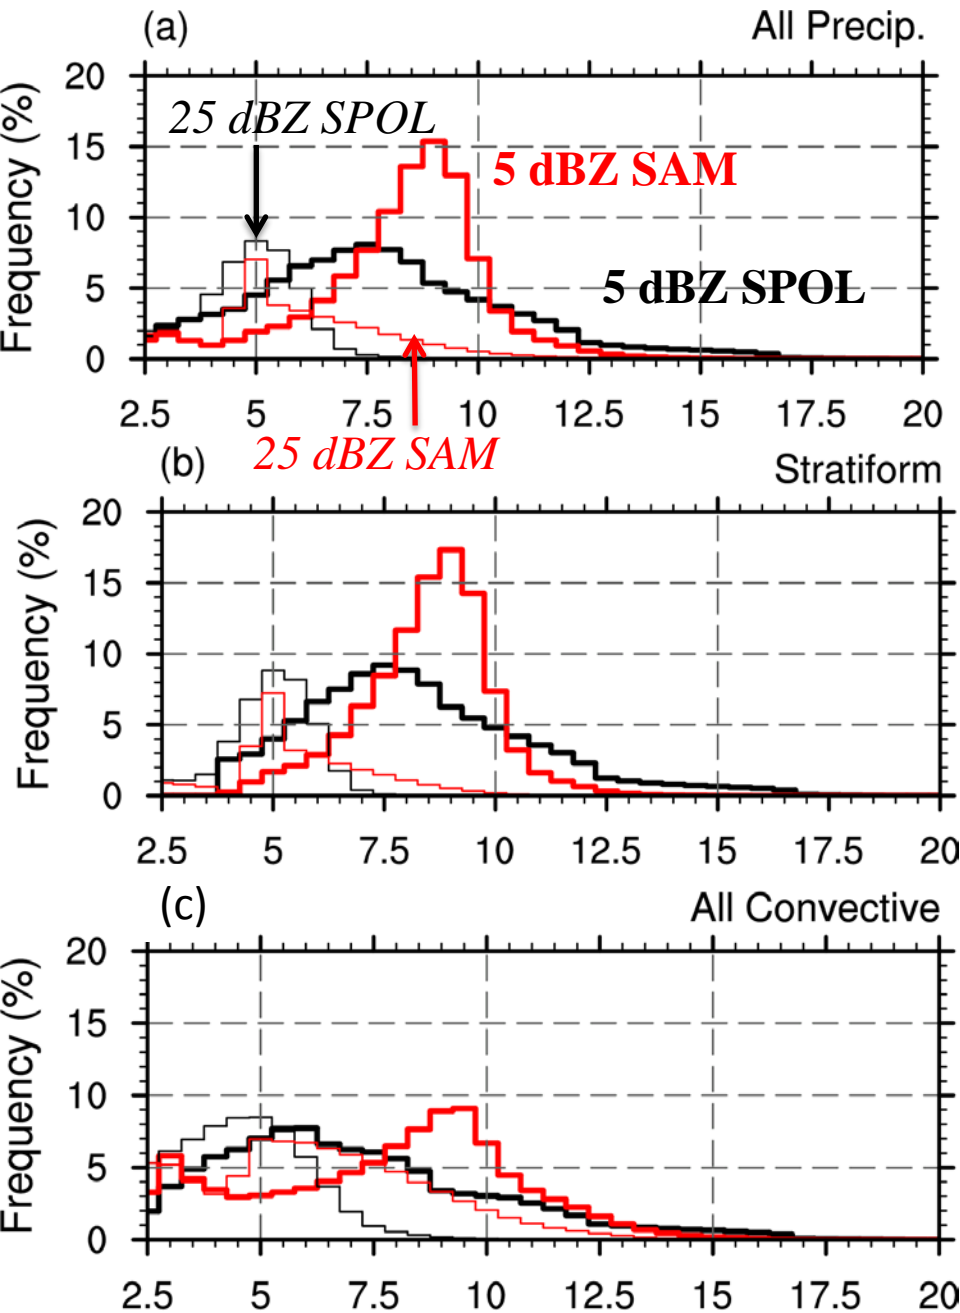

III. Statistics of MMCR/KAZR observations at Manus (2001 – present) for (a) evolution of non-precipitating and precipitating shallow convective clouds in the life cycles of various types of tropical disturbances (e.g., MJO, Kelvin waves), (b) their roles in heating and moistening the lower troposphere, and (c) their connections to the large-scale environment (temperature, humidity, winds).

IV. Assessment of numerical models in their ability of producing shallow convective clouds in the tropical deep convective regimes.

Frequencies of KAZR echo top height at Gan

^E See Poster of Matt Janiga Today (MJO)

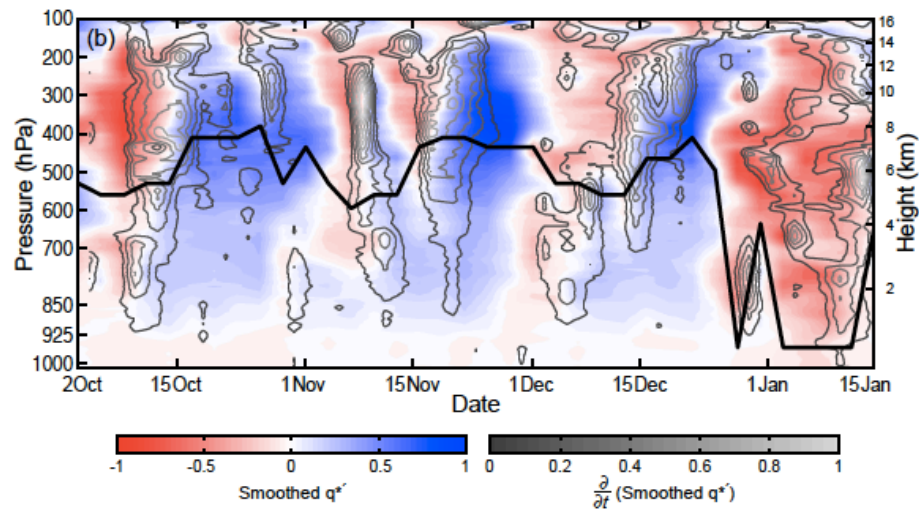

S-Pol 20 dBZ echotop height

3-day running mean

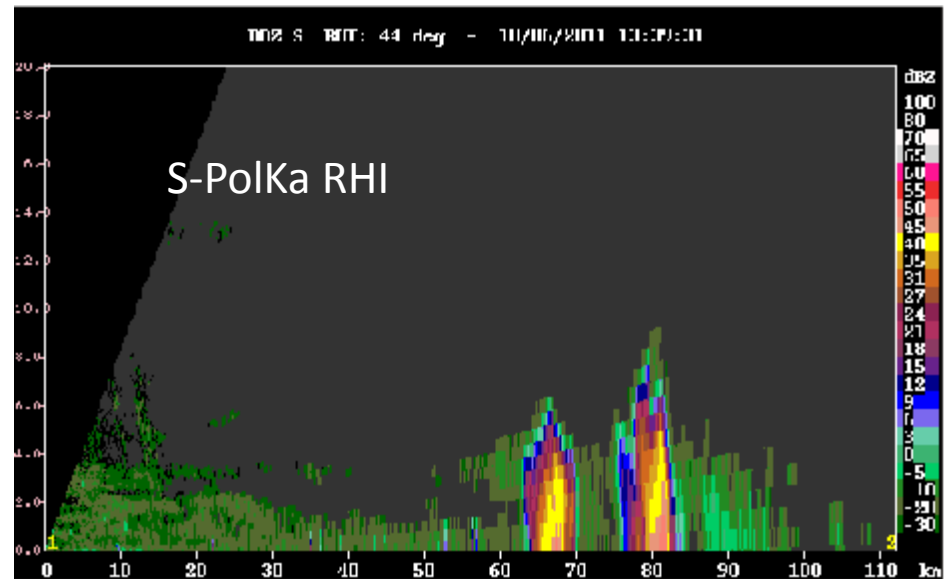

Smoothed humidity and its positive tendency (moistening)

Powell and Houze 2013

- During suppressed periods of AMIE/DYNAMO, non-precipitating clouds organized into lines oriented along the wind
- Shallow precipitating clouds began to form cold pools, which began to initiate deeper convection (ice processes) along gust fronts and removed these parallel line features

(Angela Rowe and Robert Houze, Jr.)

Mechanisms of Moistening in MJO

TOP: Observation

Composite RH with respect to timing of local clouds from AMIE/DYNAMO measurements at

Bottom: RCPM simulation

Meridional cross-section of RH (shaded), cloud (white contour) and meridional wind (black contours).

(a) Local convection

Transition from shallow to deep convection occurs here after 6 hours

(b) Mid-tropospheric advection

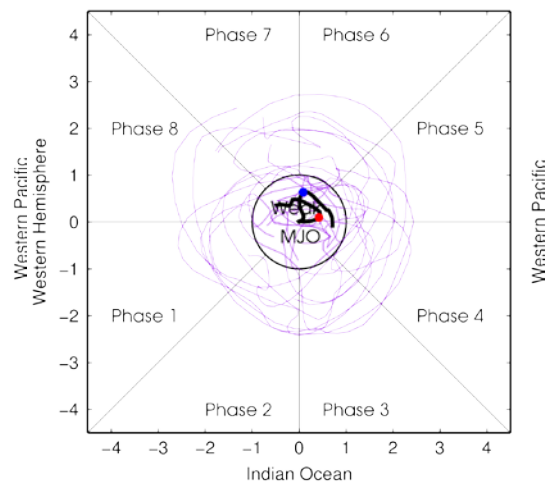

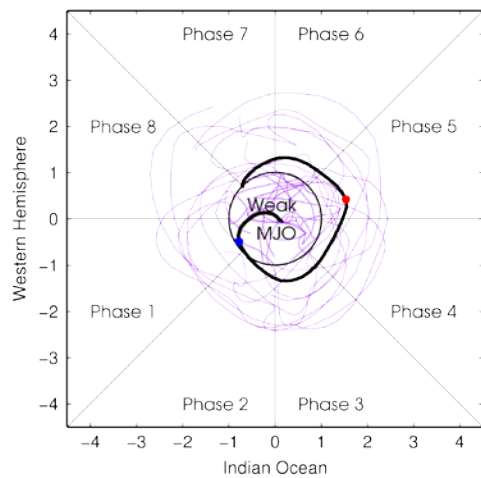

See Poster of Samson Hagos Today (MJO)

MJO

Non-MJO

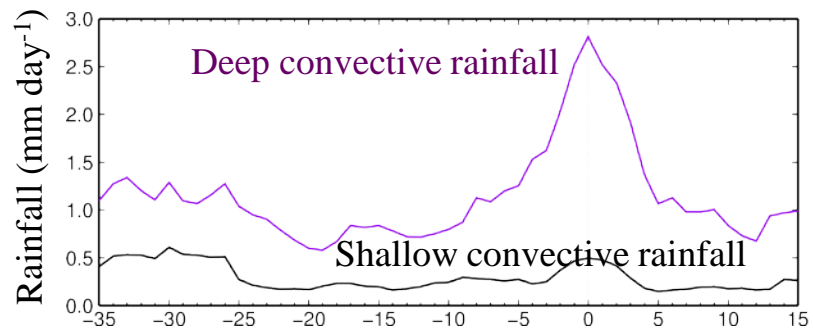

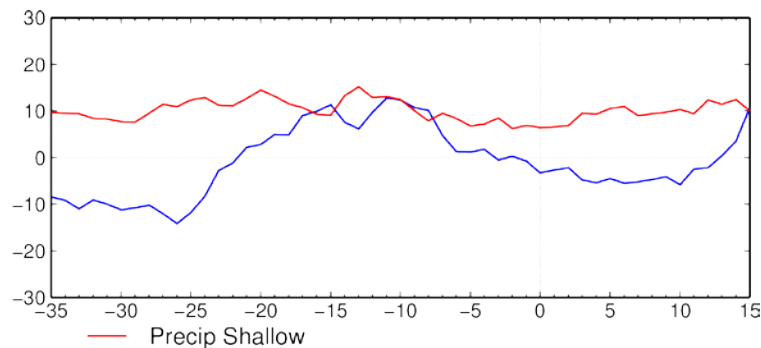

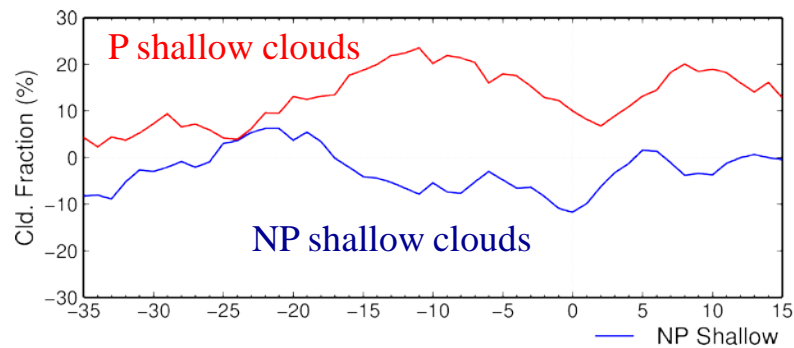

MJO

Non-MJO

Cld. Fraction (%)

ECMWF

Soundings

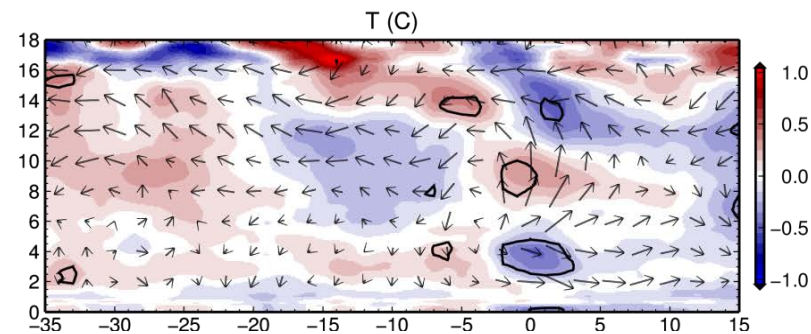

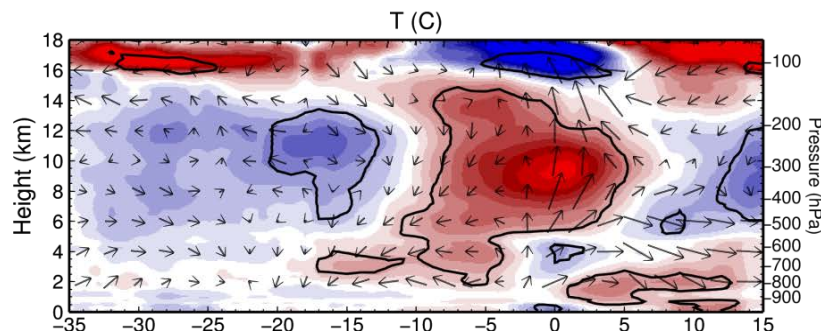

MJO

Non-MJO

11 UTC

ECMWF

Soundings

Summary:

- Unimodal cloud distributions from KAZR and S-Pol.
- Cloud-permitting models have difficulties reproducing the observed fraction of shallow cloud (insufficient grid spacing)
- The role of shallow clouds in moistening the lower troposphere: The jury is still out!